The territorial division of Costa Rica includes seven provinces: San José, Alajuela, Cartago, Heredia, Guanacaste, Puntarenas and Limón all of them offering attractive tourist destinations of almost unlimited possibilities.

History

Human settlement in Costa Rica dates back to at least the year 5000 B.C., but in comparison with the great pre-Hispanic civilizations in the Americas, the indigenous people of Costa Rica were not numerous, nor did they achieve great development.

The current Constitution of November 7, 1949, defines Costa Rica as a Democratic Republic. With the abolition of the army in 1948, Costa Rica has consolidated its commitment to peace and democracy. National forces are its only security. Instead of spending on troops and weapons, Costa Rica has invested those resources in health and education. This landmark decision has created a peaceful and pacifist country.

Climate

Costa Rica is a tropical country located between two oceans, with a complex geography that gives rise to varied climatic conditions and diverse ecosystems, ranging from tropical dry forest to rainforest and cloud forest. In the Central Valley, temperatures stay generally between 14 and 22 degrees Celsius (57-72 degrees Fahrenheit). While the country has no defined seasons, and regional climates stay relatively stable throughout the year, there are changes between "summer" (dry season) and "winter" (rainy season). Summer season is usually December to April, and "winter" is from May to November.

Official Language

Costa Rica is a Spanish-speaking country, although a high percentage of the population speaks English.

Health and Education

To enter Costa Rica, vaccinations are not required by European and American tourists. Because of Costa Rica's geographical location, regardless of the country's high levels of health, there are still isolated cases of tropical diseases. Every city has one or more hospitals, and there are always clinics or other medical services in small towns. Private medical clinics in San Jose meet European standards.

According to the World Health Organization (WHO), Costa Rica has one of the best health systems in the world. Infant mortality has decreased, while life expectancy increases. In education, the country currently has one of the highest literacy rates on the continent with about 96% of the population.

Protected Areas - Flora and Fauna

Costa Rica boasts one of the largest protected areas in the world, since approximately 25 percent of the national territory consists of land and marine national parks, biological reserves, and other wilderness areas. It´s one of the most cherished tourist destinations on the planet. This small country is blessed with everything to satisfy the interests of thousands of travellers who visit each year.
The climatic diversity of Costa Rica and the government's conservationist policies make this country a true natural paradise with a diversity of ecosystems that protect a wealth of the world's biodiversity.
In its little more than 51,000 square kilometres (19,730 sq. mi.), representing 0.03 percent of the planet's surface, here lives about 5 percent of the world's biodiversity. Costa Rica is home to five different climatic regions – dry forest, rainforest, temperate, cloud forest, and wetlands. These different environments result in multiple ecological systems that shelter numerous species of flora and fauna.

The Costa Rican government has developed and maintains a dynamic policy of conservation of national parks and wildlife refuges, among other initiatives of environmental management and protection of natural and cultural resources. The Caribbean and Pacific coastlines are scenic paradises; and from north to south, down the length of the country, stretch 500 km of mountains interspersed with majestic volcanoes and gentle hills, from which flow rivers and streams that irrigate primeval forest and agricultural crops.

In the mountainous area of the Caribbean, between 800 and 1500 m (2,625-4,920 feet) above sea level, the vegetation is characteristic of tropical rainforest, while dry forest is dominant in the North Pacific and the Central Valley; here fewer trees grow and instead grasses and herbaceous plants proliferate.

With regard to fauna, we can say that Costa Rica has an extraordinarily large and diverse number of species that live here. Depending on the area, you have the chance to see Resplendent Quetzals, five or six species of toucans, four types of monkeys, tapirs, deer, anteaters, sloths, coatis, otters, foxes, jaguars, ocelots, pumas, Scarlet Macaws, crocodiles, and dolphins, among many other animals.

In addition to those species, wilderness areas host approximately 13,000 kinds of plants, more than 2,000 species of butterflies, 4,500 night moths, 175 types of amphibians, 225 kinds of reptiles, 250 mammals, 1,600 species of freshwater and saltwater fish, and more than 900 different birds. Tens of thousands of insect species live in Costa Rica, and new species are continually being discovered.

Best Time to Visit Costa Rica

Costa Rica is a destination to which you can travel virtually year-round since it has several climatic micro-zones. The mountain ranges spanning the country from the northwest to the southeast form a barrier that divides the country into two larger climatic zones, the Pacific and the Caribbean. The amazing thing is that the climate is nearly the complete opposite from one zone to the other. The country differentiates between a dry season and a rainy season, also known as green season. It is not often, however, that rains fall for several days consecutively, except between May and November.

August to November is the best period of the birding migration to visit Costa Rica with birdwatching purposes.
